| | OK, It's December and it's going to be cold. Let's break out those shoes, boots and hats to keep warm...and have some fun! | |

My only one in this category -- It's good to be first when you only have one --

 O.K., PJ and Lisa, you both beat me to showing the same salts I have.
 Love them so much. Especially the pigs!
 PJ: at the meeting in Deerfield, Al Diamond said those top hats with canes were made for one of the World's Fairs. I think he said the Chicago Exposition. I got mine years ago from Ruth Darmstadt in upstate NY and I thought she told me they were made in the Corning factory. Anyone know definitely?

 So sorry for beating you to the punch with the piggies, Nancy D! The pigs with the top hat are my favorites not only because they are my first pigs I ever got, but also because I got them from YOU!! :)

 That delicate glass top hat of yours, PJ, is beautiful!
 Jane ~ adorable Santa, and so fitting for the topic, and the time of year!
 And, Mary, I am drooling over your 'hat'!! Keep that guy under lock & key the next time I come to S.D.!
- Lisa :)

 Wow Nancy... Interesting... never knew that about the top hat and cane... hope someone can verify the info !!!
 Thanks... P.J.

 I always admired that dainty little set in the Smith book but was never able to purchase the cane with the hat so I always passed on it. Maybe someday...

I was thinking that this subject was a complete bust with no postings whatsoever, until I remembered I didn't subscribe to the page. If you do that, you'll get notices when something new gets posted. Must take some pictures of my own shoes and hats in the near future. Just recently got a new pair of shoes I'm pretty proud of!

Okay, I have a couple - one like Mary's but I love it so posting it too! I also have two shoes - probably not salts? the opening is 2 1/2 inches long, the shoes themselves are close to 5 inches - not sure what these were for; but they are sitting in my salt collection :) -

Susie, what a gorgeous hat in stand. The OSC shows one in a wheelbarrow holder and one with a kangaroo (plate 156), but I've found them only in plain holders. I have a green opalescent one and keep hoping I find a holder to fit.

Well...I don't have a boot, nor a shoe, nor a hat...bummer :(!!

Hey Debi, What happen to our past topics from 2009? Lisa and I were looking for the one about "Do you have a match to my rare salt?". I thought you were going to move the older past topics to the reference link page or somewhere else so we wouldn't lose all that valuable information!! I sure hope they are still retrievable (is that a word??)!!

The only ones left are posted under the link above - PAST TOPICS LINKS. We have only a certain amount of space for pictures so I had to begin deleting the oldest topic when a new one was posted.

I just tried something though, and it worked. They do have an option for a "printer friendly" page and then I was able to save it as a PDF document. So I can continue to save them that way and the link would go to the PDF document instead of the actual page. Unfortunately, the deleted ones are gone for good. But maybe as we run out of topics we will redo some of the old ones in the future.

I HAVE to quit making more work for myself one of these days! But this will be a good solution to preserve them all beginning with March 2010.

Debi, Thanks for the info. We knew that you could get this years topics from the link above but we were looking for the ones from 2009...but now that you said they are gone forever...double bummer!! Well at least we will have a way to capture them going forward...thank you. Looks like we may need to repeat a couple of topics!

| Well - Until then - P O L E A S E send me pictures and info on some of the salts that were either listed there or new ones you have that you are looking for "mates" or just information on - They will go in the next National Newsletter column -- And it can work - already got an answer to one of the "unseens" from the salts Wilford had in the last issue -- Or maybe you have one you thought was a loner and have recently found info on or another one - I am hoping to make the column a great way for all of us to share our collections with each other - even if it is one or two salts at a time - So as they say in EggoLand - Thanks in advance for your help and contributions - PJ - LOVE YOU LOTS !!!!!!!!!!!!!!! Mary | | |

| The following are some of my hats & shoes in my collection, although some are not really salts. Although I seem to recall that if I say its a salt then it is a salt! The first picture is a Hobnail hat, 2nd is an Officer's cap by Paden City Glass Mtg. Co., 3rd are two Straw hat salts found in the U.S. Glass catalog of 1891, (these are some of my favorites), 4th is a Pilgrim style slipper, maker unknown, along with a Hobo boot by Degenhart. I also have a amber Band-Master cap by Ducan. First time posting... | | |

I was wondering if someone would post those "Pilgrim" shoes. I was going to take some pictures today but it is so overcast outside, and the snow from last night is still on the ground. That is one less picture I'll have to struggle with. Very nice photos Diane. My method is the kitchen island with appropriate sunlight. I always get shadows but the pictures are pretty clear.

Great idea for the column Mary! More people may respond to the newsletter pictures than our topics page. There will be a lot more eyes that way.

The pair of blue shoes Susie posted were called pipeholders by someone. Not sure where or when I remember that from. Maybe the seller I bought my green one from...picture coming soon. | 12-06-2010 04:56 PM ET (US) |

Great idea, Debi, to keep the past topics on a file for future use! I thought I was losing my last marble trying to find where Joan had posted three colors of a melon-shaped salt, not realizing they had been removed. Thanks for asking here, Joan...I got busy over the weekend and it slipped my mind.

Hey Diane!!! It is wonderful to see you posting here, with your gorgeous salts, and always FABULOUS photos! :)

Hi P.J. - I recently saw your small pink and green shoes for sale in thier original form - They held tiny salt and pepper shakers - The shakers were formed and cut in at the base to set stair-style in the shoe - The shakers were clear and the tops matched the color of the shoes - Was I bright enough to capture a picture..... That would have been too intelligent of an action -- Love your babies and you - Mary Somewhere....I have a small perfume bottle. I once saw a picture or listing of the exact bottle sitting inside a shoe. I save just about everything else but didn't save a picture of that. Now I have no idea which shoe I should look for for my little perfume bottle. Maybe someone has the set?

Mary: love the Deco looking black shoe and shakers.

| Funny thing on that Pairpoint painted Burmese hat...I remember bidding on one maybe a year ago. I don't even think it was the specially made 1993 one, and it went for far over $100. No one else even bid on this one. Is it really the bad economy, and people are just cutting back on unnecessary items? Or have most of the collectors out there already got most of what they want? We know that eBay has made items from all over the world so much more accessible. Do many of us already have our fill? Or just stopped buying newer items and plentiful items, waiting only for those really special antique items? Debi | | |

All of my hat salts are in the approximately 2-inch tall size. My Mom collects Fenton, and some of these came from her (duplicates of ones she has). I keep dropping big hints about the other small hat salts she has, but so far she isn't listening. :-)

I had a glass open salt cellar that I loved! It was some sort of military hat and the top of the hat had a shallow well. Unfortunately, I recently broke it. I have always been curious if it was common or any history behind it. I purchased it in an antique store in Oklahoma. It was clear glass and had a brim like a captains hat. Any ideas? I would like to replace it but haven't seen anything like it on e-bay. Thanks so much for any info. you can give me.

12-31-2010 08:46 PM ET (US)

Hi - They were made by Paden City Glass around the 40's and originally sold as an ash tray - When hunting on Ebay be sure to check under ash trays and sometimes they show up under pin trays also -- Someone may have one for sale here and if so am sure they will let you know - Mary

70 Mary Kern

01-01-2011 08:55 AM ET (US)

Hello again -- There are several listed right now on eBay - Search under "glass hat military" -- There are clear and colors - some very expensive and some reasonable - Good Luck and Happy New Year -- Mary

74 Mary Kern

01-01-2011 05:51 PM ET (US)

I doubt that Diane would be selling her hat - but she does check the board -- The ones I told you about on eBay right now are this same hat - Just look under military glass hat and there are or were 10 or 11 of them - Mary

75 Lisa Tiedeman

01-01-2011 06:12 PM ET (US)

I'm pretty certain Diane would not be interested in selling her hat, as it was listed here to share, and not under the "buy & sell" page. The best bet would be to search Ebay as Mary suggested ~ or check the buy & sell page on this site to see if someone may have one.
Lisa :)

Thanks so much guys. I looked on e-bay and found them. I will be so happy to replace something that I loved and used as an open salt cellar when cooking.
