I guess I'll post what I consider to be my rarest enamel salts. They are undoubtedly French. The mystery of why the backside is undecorated has been solved. These were at one time attached to a centerpiece of some sort, perhaps with candles to help light the table. Since that side would never be seen, they were not embellished.

Backside that would have faced inward, attached to the centerpiece.

Inside is the crest or part of the coat-of-arms that is for the Bourbon ruling family of France. I was told that the crests could only be used or displayed by family members so as distant of relatives they may have been, these would have at one time belonged to someone in that family line.

So, Miss Susie Salt Collector--how many salts do you have now? I know you only began a short time ago. You have so many pairs and sets!

Can you believe I am still up?

Nancy Dietel 22 10-02-2011 10:30 AM ET (US) IP: 74.105.130.192	Susie, great salts. I love Nekrasoff salts and almost all with enameling. Still recovering from the drive to Williamsburg, but I will make an effort to photograph some of mine. I know they all need cleaning. I bought a very tiny blue enamel salt and spoon from Mimi Rudnick's daughter (the Salt Lady). She is selling off her mother's inventory and she had mostly silver salts but a lot with enameling. She also had piles of the Smith books which she was selling for (I think) $2. each. Some of the rarer ones disappeared quickly. Nancy D
Susie P 23 10-02-2011 11:22 AM ET (US) IP: 209.132.170.72	Hi Nancy, Can't wait to see yours! and what a great treat to buy that set from Mimi's daughter. I never knew her, (too new a collector) but I bought a used H&J filled with notations, bought from Mimi, etc. I thought that was neat! Sounds like she was really a great salt ambassador :)

Nancy Dietel 24 10-02-2011 12:04 PM ET (US) IP: 74.105.130.192	She was a great lady, Susie. She taught me so much. She would show me a particular salt, such as a plique a jour, and she would say, "I know you can't afford this now, but you must know what it is and how it is made". I never forgot how generous she was with her knowledge. Treasure that H&J, if she made notations, they are valuable things to know. Nancy D

Have never seen another of these. It's made in Norway. It's fairly small with a removable blown glass liner. Got it a very long time ago, before I ever heard of gold wash over silver. I thought it was tarnish and tried to remove it from the stem.

Nancy - Is Mimi's daughter doing anything with her salts or books on the internet? I would have loved to meet her. She had a great mom! Sometimes we just used to talk on the phone. She had standard poodles, and we talked about

Nancy V.,
Yes, the feet on my Battersea are missing. I don't know if they were purposely removed to accommodate the stand, but in my opinion the stand is prettier than the salt so I believe it was a good decision if they were! I'll post a couple of pictures so you can see how ornately the stand is decorated and perfectly "fitted" to the salt. So much so, that it is difficult to see where the original legs were attached. If you look closely at the close up picture you can just make out a bit of "brown" where they were hollowed out and replaced with the ormolu stand!

They really are cute little sets and I would love to find one in red...if indeed it was ever made in red! Do you remember where you found yours? Joan

Nancy Dietel 10-22-2011 10:22 AM ET (US) IP: 74.105.130.192	Joan: I would like to have one in red also. I bought mine from Mimi Rudnick's daughter (the Salt Lady) who brought an entire filled table of her mother's salts to the convention. There were so many and most were silver. The enamel one just caught my eye and she had about 6 of them. I didn't even look to see if there were other colors. The daughter had a good time at convention and is selling most of her mother's inventory. I heard her say she would come to other meetings. Nancy D
