1	Debi Raitz This topic should cover a wide range of salts...any color glass that is cut to clear. Happy New Year!	01-01-2011 05:18 PM ET (US)

I've always liked the shape of this one with the side opening.

Maybe a cordial but I like it.

These were all pictures I took some time ago. I'll have to look around and see if I have anything other than clear and cobalt, but I doubt it.

Don't forget to subscribe to this page.

Very pretty. I don't think I have any examples of sets of these at all.

I love cut-to-clear, will try to add some pictures when I get home later this week if others haven't shown them by then.

Isn't that blue one lovely? I bought a pair at the Red House antique shop in York. I had seen them but dismissed them as nut cups. When I was paying for other purchases, the owner said "let me show you the prettiest pair of salts I've ever seen" and led me back to them. Twice was the charm and I bought them. I sold one years ago on ebay to a man whose wife had seen it and loved it but thought my price was too high for her. He bought it for her Christmas present, asked me to mail it to a neighbor to keep it a surprise. Ebay wouldn't allow that these days.

oh P.J. -

01-08-2011 02:17 PM ET (US)

The condiment set with the blue at the top is to DIE for!!! I love it! I don't know ab out the cordial, my cut to clear below might be too, but is the exact size for a salt - so "tis a salt" - HA!

I love the look of color fading to clear like your set, P.J. Moser did a lot of that though this aqua color doesn't look like Moser.

P.S. I have two salts that belong in sets like this. They are both cranberry at the top fading to clear at the base. One is cut in a diamond pattern, one plain cut and polished panels.

29 Debi Raitz	01-09-2011 06:56 PM ET (US)	Remember when we had the "Changing Colors" topic in October? I was hoping to see all these bluina and rubina type salts posted there. Since that page is still available through the PAST TOPICS LINK above, maybe they should get added there instead. Since I have found a way to keep those pages up indefinitely now, having all the same types together would be nice. If they get added there I can delete them from here and keep this as the cut to clear page. Salts can always be added to the old topics until those pages are put in PDF form...or about 6 months before I have to take off the original page and replace it with the PDF page. As of now, anything from the OCEAN BLUES topic to present can still have pictures added to them. Debi

Below are three of my very favorite salts! They are favorites because they are cut-to-clear, but also because they are standing on pedestals! I have a true weakness for pedestal salts (like you too, Joan)!

Happy New Year Everyone!! Boy...I am really in catch-up mode...still putting Christmas decorations away!! All of your cut-to-clear salts are lovely and I tried to find a few that have not been posted yet. Most are self-explanatory so I will just load the pictures. And yes Lisa...I have included a couple of pedestal just for you!!

Mary, Shipping large batches of snow...should be water by the time it reaches Sandy Eggo!!

Nancy, Yes, that first blue one is marked Walsh and you are so right that you have the mate because I bought this one from you a few years back...still love it!

Inez, I bought that condiment set (don't know why I called it a cruet set???) from a seller in England when I first started collecting. She had three sets all in mint condition. I was a fool not to buy all three because she was selling them for a steal...$9.99 per set. Live and learn!!

Joan

53 Debi Raitz

01-21-2011 07:27 PM ET (US)

Wow, Joan! Those are all gorgeous. $10 for the set? That was a steal. I didn't know you had so many blue ones either. That first pedestal one you posted looks like it's marked "Austria" on the metal. I like the one you said is one of your favorites too. Anyone got any suggestions for next month?

Debi

Oh WoW Joan - Free water !! Means more pennies for the goodies !! Still drooling - Mary

55 Joan F.

01-21-2011 11:21 PM ET (US)

Debi,
Did we do "enamel" over metal/silver yet? Or how about metal/silver "rimmed" salts, could be glass, china, stone, wood...anything with a metal/silver rim? Or perhaps trencher salts? And I don't think we did Oriental salts yet either!!

Joan

56 Debi Raitz

01-22-2011 01:54 AM ET (US)

All good suggestions...Anyone else want to weigh in on it? I like all the suggestions and we can do them all one by one.

Debi

57	Mary Kern I think one time we talked about Shells/Beach stuff - Or Frosted glass - Have we ever done materials other than glass,porcelain or silver? - Scenic salts - I like Joan's suggestion on Oriental too - Not condiments because we have been there - But just Salt and matching Pepper - There are a lot of those out there that were NOT a part of a condiment set -- Pattern glass is good -- Doubles -- Sorry too much coffee already -- Mary	01-22-2011 07:13 AM ET (US)
58	Nancy Villaverde Joan F, my picture that included the one like your round red one is so small no wonder it was overlooked. I love the green, have always liked that color, so I'm not likely to get tired of it. I think there aren't many green cut to clear. That one is some fan and diamond variation and is individual size. That blue to clear that you said is a favorite rings a bell with me too. I think I've added to your collection quite a bit in the past, and that may be another one. I should have kept that one! Nancy V	01-22-2011 04:47 PM ET (US)
59	Debi Raitz Mary, you're right. We did talk about this before and decided we'd rather think about the beach in winter than the cold and snow. Actually, this was supposed to be the January topic. So how about "Sea Life?" Let's concentrate on shells, fish, dolphins, turtles, mermaids, etc. We can do all boats at a later time.  Remind me at the end of February about these other topics. I will surely have forgotten again by then! LOL  Debi	01-22-2011 11:32 PM ET (US)
60	Mary Kern I will stick them in a "remind Debi" folder and then you will never ever have to think of a topic again ---- Until we use these up -- Will add boats to the list also -- Mary	01-23-2011 08:47 AM ET (US)
61	Debi Raitz Ahhh Mary! You know me so well. LOL  Debi	01-23-2011 07:02 PM ET (US)
62	Mary Kern Only because I know me the same - lol lol --- I added Swans too - as I know there are some gorgeous ones out there - especially the ones with the lemon squeezer bases and such --	01-23-2011 08:30 PM ET (US)

If any one has any ideas just post them here on the current topics page - or send them directly to me and we will just keep the list going --

Week end is over ----- Bummer ----- Mary

Joan, in Britain they are called cruet sets, in the US they are called condiments sets or if made before 1915 castor/caster sets.

64 Joan F.

01-26-2011 02:08 PM ET (US)

Thanks Inez. I always thought that a cruet set was one that had an oil decanter with it and a condiment was just the salt, pepper and mustard. But, like you pointed out, it all depends on where you come from as to what you call them. And I didn't know what-the-heck a castor/caster set was...so thanks for the education on that one also...I feel smarter already...lol!!
Joan

65 Nancy Villaverde

01-26-2011 02:38 PM ET (US)

I've gotten hooked on these sets, especially the glass bases. I search all three names, having noted that the Brits prefer castor. Cruet will pull up pickle jars unless you -pickle in the search. I think the most common US name is condiment. I appreciate Inez's age distinction but suspect many people aren't educated about that.
