Debi Raitz¹ ★ 09-01-2011 05:06 PM ET (US) IP: 24.192.57.245	Any figural boats or "boat" shapes, such as the oval shapes on pedestals. There should be tons of these ranging from the small, plain pewter to the elegant plique-a-jour. And as many colors, styles and cuttings of the oval pedestal that are sometimes referred to as Anglo-Irish salts. Debi

Boat shaped ribbed bowl on square lemon squeezer base. Most boat shaped salts from this period have diamond shaped bases. Ribbs are much thicker than P. J. #7, and salt is smaller overall. 3 1/3 long, 2 1/16 wide, 3 3/8 high.

Boat shaped blown bowl with cut pannels below a band of etched tulips on a diamond shaped lemon squeezer base. Notice that the wafer has been cut to be 8 sided. I was told by the dealer that he found this salt near Mainheim,

	PA so could be Steigel but I doubt that. Glass does not show under uv light to be like Anglo Irish glass that I have. Probably Continental. Edited 09-01-2011 11:49 PM

The Norse boats are wonderful, Sherrie. I envy you the plique, and the ones with enamel are lovely too. I have only a sterling set with powder horn and spoon purchased together years ago. Who is the collector who had a large collection of the pewter ones posted some time ago?
