	 Condiment set. Had this about 8 to 10 years now. Bought it through the Quimper Club. I have the marks saved as separate pictures on all my stuff so I'll have to post the picture and then the mark. I have a lot, but will hold off for a couple weeks to give everyone else a chance to get theirs posted first. Lannion is a town in the Brittany region of France but despite all the faience books I have, I don't see the MC (or CM) mark. It is similar to the GM mark of Geo Martel. But I understand that he worked out of Desvres which is in northern France.

Nancy D: I would say that your #8 is not faience because it appears to have a clear glaze, especially on the top of the base where it appears it has pooled in some crevices. Faience uses a tin glaze that comes out opaque white. Faience and majolica (or maiolica) are closely related. Here's a link I found to somewhat explain all the different types of "china."

I think there are some collectors who would never buy an elegant glass salt unless it was in perfect unused condition. But I think the majority of us are in between and just love the darn things no matter what condition they are in. They all need homes right? In other words, we all have our preferences and our likes and dislikes. It's what makes this group so diverse. If we all had the same stuff, there wouldn't be any need for show and tell! It's free to use for up to 5 gigabytes. I just subscribed for a year because I needed more space than that, but if you just want to store your collection pictures so you can add them here without having to go to the main computer, sounds like a good fit. It's so easy too, nothing complicated. Just go to https://www.cubby.com/ and download for free on your main computer, then select whatever pictures or files you'd like to access on your iPad. I understand it works with an iPhone too. I don't know much about iPads or iPhones but now I can work on things between my computer and laptop. When a file or picture is added or changed in one place, it will automatically appear that way in the other as soon as you turn it on. By the way, love all the faience getting added here. I plan to take newer pictures this month of what I have. Some of my pictures are really old, small and just plain bad. Many I don't have pictures of at all. Debi

124 Debi Raitz★ 04-07-2013 07:14 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	There is a website devoted to Geo Martel faience that is by his granddaughter, Rita Martel. Here's the link: http://geo-martel-desvres.pagesperso-orange.fr/. It's in French. If you have Windows 7, you can right click when you're on the page and then select "translate with Bing." It's not a perfect translation but it helps a lot. If you scroll down the page to where it says "La collection Fourmaintraux-Frères" and click on it, the first page of items will appear. You need to click on each link to see the next page. I'm in the process of asking permission to use just the salt images on my website so they would all be in one group, but so far no luck. These are the works of Formaintraux Brothers. There are also 3 or 4 images of salts in the "La collection Fourmaintraux-Courquin" link. So even if we have unmarked pieces like my lion, I know it was made by Fournmaintraux. It also comes as a double salt. I have the single. Mary's tall rabbit is there but not shown with any salts at all. There are a lot of forms we will recognize including many double sided figurals and "meneges" (condiment sets). Debi

I tried to take a picture of the case I have with all the smaller faience salts in it but standing straight on gets a bad flash. This is the best I could do. The hare in the top left is a pedestal but you can't see the hare if I stand it upright. That's it for me unless anyone wants to see a better picture of anything in the case. I do have separate pictures of most of these.

158 Debi Raitz★ 04-20-2013 12:31 AM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	A bucket list would have to be a personal list, but what do you all think about having a Salt Gallery on the website? I've saved tons of pictures over the years and have done nothing with them. Other than them being something rather unusual or just something I liked, I really have no use for the pictures, so maybe I can share them that way. There would have to be categories like Art Glass in Holders, Doulton, Wedgwood, Enamel, Yellowware, Lacies, etc, and then anyone could send me pictures to add. I never kept super large images long ago, so they'd only

	be about 200 pixels wide or about 2 inches but still plenty more to drool over. I suppose they would be in the Collections section of the website. Any thoughts, or would you all help add to them with your own pictures? Debi
