Let's see all the itty bitty and extra large size salts. Itty Bitty can be children's pieces, miniature bowls (that may or may not be salts) or dollhouse minis that look like miniature open salts. Extra large can be table salts of larger proportions than usually seen.

38 Debi Raitz★ 05-13-2013 09:09 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	I have one of those tall salts too and I love it. It's top shelf in my lit curio cabinet with old clear and cobalt around it. I think I may have the advertisement for those animals. It was in one of those old series of glass magazines that began in the late 60-70s. Something like Rainbow Review or Glass Collectors Digest. I have both complete sets and they're interesting to read through. I had it scanned as something of interest to include in future newsletters. I have since discarded all newsletter files to my external hard drive. I'll have to hook that up and see if I can find it for you. Debi Edited 05-13-2013 11:48 PM

I would have no problem pretending it's an open salt. I didn't know what you meant until I saw there were two shakers...but there is evidence that those could be for red pepper and black pepper and it really is an open salt. I'll look for that catalog picture again.

Inez Austin 05-24-2013 03:27 PM ET (US) IP: 50.46.37.89	Have we had topics like "it's mine and I call it a salt" or "Bone, stone or plastic" or "old (100+) and new (0-10 years) since manufacture" I think we had one for all metal? Otherwise I just don't know.....
90 Inez Austin 05-24-2013 03:27 PM ET (US) IP: 50.46.37.89	I have been away from home pretty much since the beginning of April, so I haven't added much.
91 Nancy Dietel 05-25-2013 09:56 AM ET (US) IP: 74.105.126.154	Have we done topics on animals? I know we did cats & dogs, but there are a lot of elephant salts as well as other animals. Also, birds and winged insect salts; transportation (cars, boats); celery or platter salts and sets. Nancy D
92 Debi Raitz 05-25-2013 12:32 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	Well I think we just saw a lot of faience animals but I know there's a lot more than just faience so we will do that one within the next few months. It will be anything but dogs and cats. Instead of "bone, stone and plastic" why don't we do anything but glass, ceramics and metals? That would be a lot of different mediums like wood, shells, plastic, stone, bone, horn, etc. We can always look at the past topics list and see what was done in the last couple years. We'll probably have to begin repeating a few topics or think about giving this a rest for a little while. There's only about 7-8 people who contribute on a regular basis. There used to be a lot more. I wish more people would join in. It's so easy to do. Debi
93 Nancy Dietel 05-25-2013 01:13 PM ET (US) IP: 74.105.126.154	I like to print out the topics and save them for reference material. I have a few folder boxes with handles that I can index and file. I do the same with the newsletters.
94 Nancy Dietel 05-26-2013 10:54 AM ET (US) IP: 74.105.126.154	Swans and peacocks could be included in a bird category. Butterflies and other winged insects could be in a separate category. I have a lot of beautiful swans in all mediums. Nancy D

These Doulton pieces are normally very large - I was so pleasantly surprised to see this one in a much smaller size at 3 1/4" across --

Center piece double table salt - 6 1/2" long and 8" high -- I purchased this and the sea horse together and when they arrived I was so surprised - I had anticipated the horse being the larger of the two pieces - Love them they both - They were from Holly's collection -- m

These are very tiny boat salts by John Millward Banks made in Birmingham in 1890. Length 2 1/4" long and under 1" high. Marks are faint but readable on them. In good shape for 123 years old.

117 Debi Raitz 05-31-2013 07:53 AM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	Sooooo...unless someone would prefer a different topic for June, it is scheduled to be "Anything But." That means anything but glass, ceramics or silver. This would encompass plastic, wood, stone, bone, horn, ivory, coral, shells and anything else that's a salt not made of glass, ceramic material or silver. Even though that sounds like a lot of different salts, there may not be very much of it. So if anyone would prefer something else... As was mentioned, our collections are continuously evolving and we can revisit old topics. We once had "Across the Pond" that was English salts. We could do a specific Doulton and/or Wedgwood. We can also do swans and/or birds, or all animals except dogs and cats (done not too long ago). I don't really have any preferences. I would rather the topics be suggestions from those who like to post to them. The only criteria should be that it's a broad enough category so the few people who do post have enough to contribute. Or we can combine two or more things. Let me know by midnight. Debi
