Sets & Pairs

This can be a variety of things!

Pairs are pretty much self explanatory. They can be exact or a matched pair but different, like opposites or boy/girl.

Sets can be boxed sets of any number of salts.

Sets can also be open salts with matching shakers or nested sets, sets on trays, even open salts with matching spoons.

Sets can be the same salts in different colors, celery sets, even a master and an individual.

Any medium allowed.

Let's try to not include condiment sets in holders or double salts. That's another couple of categories on their own. But if you have sets not in holders they can be included.

Australian made by Stokes & Son Melbourne. Probably about 1920-25. Kangaroo stand 1 3/4" tall, the shell 2 3/8" and 4" from tail tip to shell edge. It is harder to find the ones with the shell. More were made with a round bowl and had an Emu & Kangaro on the side or just a plain bowl.

Harry Atkins of Atkins Bros, a famous firm of British Silversmiths designed these salt pourers. The design 555684 was registered in 1910-11. He also designed a similar set that was plainer and rounder. The salt was tipped up and came out the spout, doing away with a salt spoon. They are Sheffield Silver with a makers mark and date of 1912. I have never seen anything other than the rounder set, that resembled these salts. They were sold by J.W Benson Ltd, a jeweller famous in his own right for the pocket watches he designed and made. And they are engraved with "J", how could they not have been mine.

07:03 AM ET (US) IP: 74.105.140.134	 So, true, Janelle. I have a few special salts that hold many memories of the person who gave it to me or how it was acquired. I have a wonderful set of porcelain salts that my cousin gave me from my Aunt's estate. Each has a different flower around the outside. Here is one that has holly on it. I will try to photograph all of them as a set. She never set a formal table without salts and nut dishes.

	-- The wabbit stayed behind and this fantastic OLD set came home to safety -- I did tell them the truth about the wabbit but they did not want to hear - I never have felt remorse for getting this set so cheaply and I also never sold them more salts or put any on consignment there --

They look too drab in present condition but would look spectacular in silver or gold. Did you know there is a gold plate restorer too? Pretty expensive though, at least the one I saw was. Too bad the liner can't come out. It sure looks like it would.

Anyway, there are less expensive kits available here in the US. Check eBay or Amazon and I'm sure you'll find them. It does work extremely well if the base is copper, brass or EPNS. It will not work on other base metals. I had

I did a lot of looking and asking when I first got the set but didn't find much. I don't have any catalogs and at the time didn't know about your vast information vault. I will keep trying. Mary, do you mean Lisa T? I will try that outlet. I almost never buy sets, but hubby really wanted me to have this one. He negotiated the price and was very proud of himself. They are really nice...come to think of it I will use them on the Thanksgiving table since we're having guests beyond family this year. (Always a silver lining...)

I don't check for a day or two, and it takes FOREVER to get through the "Goodies" I've enjoyed looking(and envying) them all. Susie you just keep coming up with GREAT FINDS, "right under my nose"!! I doubt that you found them here in Indy though! The "fish set" that you show, I've never seen in a box. I have the set like that, but no box. I just last week got a "fish set" from Brenda Mc. but they are Quite Different from yours. I was greatly surprised to get a Sterling Fish Spoon with them, and the Pepper Shaker opens on the bottom, by unscrewing the fins! And the Open Salt is marked Hawaiian Silverplate. Sorry that I can't show them, I'm "TOO DUMB" to get into that!(or too lazy to learn!)
295 Mary Kern★ 11-10-2014 06:33 PM ET (US) IP: 72.220.213.56	I have gone back through and looked at the showing here - It is amazing how many absolutely breathtaking and beautiful salts there are - I realized that I have a very bland collection compared to most of yours and isn't that great - We all have some of this and some of that and yet we each have an area that tickles the hell out of us and we grab as many of those as we can - I have tried so hard to be a collector rather than just an admirer of the art glass salts - but give me pottery and I go to pieces - Carve me a bear or throw some little enamel specks on a brass ring and I swoon - And at the same time - show me your high class art glass in all their splendid colors and I drool - But when I get them I don't keep them -- Very strange -- Okay enough sentimental rambling - I go find some already taken pictures of pottery or whatever --

Well until I have some picture trying to take time - that is it for me -- P.J. - they are salt spoon size and I have lost the info I had on them so I will say they are carved bone ivory celluloid -- Maybe I will remember to take them with me Wed and ask Sandie to remind me what the heck she sold me -- lol
DEBI - Once the set arrived and I could see it - Quite obvious to me that it was meant to be a cigarette holder and the shape of the tray was an individual ashtray - I am sure there are more of the trays somewhere - If you have seen it in a catalog as an open salt set - I would love to know more about it - Maybe the faces held celery and the tray salt - but I doubt that to as it is too narrow - The bases are marked with a sort of crown looking mark and Italy - I say it that way because the top part of the crown looks like SSMI - Oh crude - I will turn camera on and see what I can get - Maybe it was for thin bread sticks and dunking oil in the bowl - But I truly think it be a ciggy set --

335 Debi Raitz★ 11-11-2014 07:15 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	Mary: I think your set #304 is Capodimonte with that crown mark. I have just the top part but with gold trim. The bottom has the number "1227" in red on the bottom. I think you're right that it's probably not a salt. It has an irregular bottom inside and it's rather deep. But then again, so are some of those Stiegel type glass salts. I like it so it will stay with my "white" collection of salts, but it most likely is not a salt. A cigarette holder and ashtray makes sense.

A very versatile man. Susie, You cannot disturb sleeping cats. I have 352 also, but without the pepper. When I bought it, it was sold as being made to hold a boiled egg sitting in the large section (which does hold an egg nicely) and the small bowl was for the salt to sprinkle of the egg. By the way mine has the design number 9147 and the makers mark for John Sherwood & Sons circa 1897.

428 Janelle Jefferson 11-14-2014 02:55 AM ET (US) IP: 124.149.183.216	Debi & Judy, I am pretty sure your thistle salts were made by Charles Horner, he was famous for making hat pins, thimbles etc. he used the thistle extensively on his Hat Pins. I cannot make out the date letter clearly but as the salts were assayed at Chester, if you can make out the letter you should be able to check the date. I think it would be late 1890's to early 1900's.

Here I go wandering off again because this is only a partial set. US Glass did quite a large States series of salt shakers but did only a few open salts in these patterns. I think only these three are confirmed open salts in the series though there is one sometimes included as Virginia. These are left to right Washington, Nevada, and Illinois. I also have Nevada with a ruby stained body below the ruffle.

Here's the second.. They came from our trip to Alaska 1993... We had the chance to cruise the inland water-way then fly to Prudo Bay and take the bus down the Dalton highway along the pipeline to Fairbanks. A trip of a lifetime... I think the salts are made of wood and the spoons are of a metal alloy...
The first salt had Totum designs... the second has a whale...

Jytte, your glass salts are so colorful and such a high quality. Love the four "petals"? Or are they hearts in that beautiful ice blue color?
PJ, I have some Alaskan salts like that. A few years back someone in one of the clubs found a source for them. Maybe someone else remembers. There were 2 different patterns and I bought one of each with spoons. I think the company was Boma. They look hand carved and yours probably are. These newer ones were some composition material.

Hey Hey - I got me a Fuga, Svend Palmqvist, Orrefors, Sweden just like Jytte's on account of I got it from her -- sigh --- Yep the colors of the glass from that area is so definite and bright --
Nancy - The Boma's were bought by someone with a resale number - I think that was the only way they would sell them - I had tried to get them to sell to me and then found out they need a retailer - For the life of me I cannot remember who jumped in and bought a bunch of them for us -- I still have the original one I bought in a store while on our first trip to Canada - We have made quite a few trips since then - but fear our last one mega years ago was our last trip - Beautiful Country - Almost bought land in Whistler for our retirement -- but as you can see we stayed in ole EggoLand and am more retired than need be - lol lol

Silver stamped with the makers mark of DL for David Loeb of Schindler & Co London 1924.
A lot of these style salts with the Silver rims seemed to have been done by this Silversmith. A variation in the colour, one tending to a darker red.

541 Debi Raitz★ 11-17-2014 07:15 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	Janelle: Your pair of clear glass appear to be that CANE pattern we were talking about on the Pattern Topic last month. It was mentioned that the same pattern was also made in England. Here's a question about all of these hallmarked silver rimmed glass salts...When the glass is not marked is it considered to be a product of the silversmith who may have ordered the glass and applied rims, or made by a glass company who had silver rims applied? Who is considered the manufacturer of the piece? When Doulton made their salts and some have hallmarked sterling rims, that rim information pretty much gets pushed aside because we know it's Doulton. But what about unmarked pottery or glass? It gets too confusing for me.
542 Janelle 11-17-2014 08:38 PM ET (US) IP: 124.168.44.223	 Thanks Debi, Re the rims, with someone like David LoebI from what I have seen and have, the salts are very ordinary, maybe he bought the salts or else a supplier would and just contract out to him. With a firm like Doulton, I think they would never be anything other than a Doulton salt and the silversmiths would be proud to put their rims on that work. The rest would probably just done for the general trade. A few David LoebI salts, glass & China
543 Debi Raitz★ 11-17-2014 08:59 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	Janelle: I always figured that reputable silversmiths would have plain glass liners made for some of their silver salts and there was no question as to who the maker of that silver salt was. But the rim thing has always confounded me as far as who would be considered the manufacturer of an item with a marked rim but the glass or pottery was unmarked. For anyone trying to research their salts it gets confusing. I have that cute little windmill salt. Will have to clean the rim and see if it's a LoebI rim. I did find another unmarked ceramic salt I have with a LoebI rim.

Janelle Jefferson 11-18-2014 12:21 AM ET (US) IP: 124.168.44.223	Debi, The set I posted with the Imari pattern Royal Crown Derby does not have stamps on the China as such. When I bought them many years ago I was assured that they had been well & truly researched and identified. The rims off course were silver and easy to verify. I think they would have been made for the silversmith. I have always referred to them by both the China maker & the silversmith. If the pattern or other similar items can be definitely attributed to a particular manufacturer, that is a bonus, but if only the rim can be identified I guess they win the naming lottery. A chicken & egg scenario . It does make it interesting, but frustrating.

610 Janelle Jefferson 11-21-2014 12:46 AM ET (US) IP: 202.159.157.103	PJ, I think that your case maybe for salts but the salts themselves do not look like they warrant a case that fine. In my opinion I think someone has made a marriage of the case with two ordinary salts. I can see a nice silver set with Bristol blue liners living in there. Is there not a travelling set in the OSC. Must go look. I may be wrong, (I think I was once, LOL. :-).
611 Debi Raitz 11-21-2014 01:46 AM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	PJ: The flat side is so it doesn't roll away. I suspect that is the bottom. Most boxes have the velvet bottom and the silk top. Whatever originally came it that box must have had a curved bottom. I can't think of what it could be. I'll try a little research.

If it was indeed for something other than salts, which I must say sit very nicely in the box anyway, it possibly was for napkin rings, often given as present.

I know the feeling - I forgot about the windmills - I love the windmills also -- I won a few pairs and so while they are still pairs - I thought I could share them - Going to do it tonight as we are social butterflies tomorrow and I must not over extend myself or I become a bit less than social - lol lol --

	A pair of CROWN DRESDEN - Circa 1880 - I love Dresden --- so delicate when it is in this style of floral decorating -
