31 Debi Raitz★ 01-03-2014 06:50 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	Great news Mary! Yes, I would like just a ray or two of that nice warm sunshine. I just saw we are in for even colder temps next week. Brrrrrrrr!
32 Susie P 01-03-2014 06:52 PM ET (US) IP: 166.205.55.34	great news!!!! Mary!! I know you are SO glad that you no longer have to wear the brace: glad everything is healing correctly, Yeah!!
33 Nancy Dletel 01-03-2014 06:52 PM ET (US) IP: 74.105.137.82	Love all the doubles I am seeing. I particularly love the colored lacies, I am sure I don't have any of those beauties. I don't have many glass doubles, guess I have to look around more when I have the nerve to get out from under my cuddly blanket? Ten degrees this morning with 8" of snow. Supposed to go below zero tonight! Mary, so happy to see your smiling face without the brace! Good for you!

You have 24 hrs to pack Mr. Tabby and salts 40, 67, 68 and send them to me. Mary, I will have pity on you because of your back and only take salts 41,47 and 50 The Asaltinator
72 Susie P 01-07-2014 07:04 AM ET (US) IP: 75.103.187.136	Janelle, Too funny, Ms Asaltinator!!!! :):) and you just chose a few! Thank heavens this is such a long range stick-up I feel safe in gently declining as I love the "jewels" and I know for sure MrTabby isn't going anywhere, just taking him to the vet is exhausting!!!!!! The only cat I ever had that didn't mind traveling was a Siamese, my first cat, I took him on weekend trips often, didn't realize how rare that was..... Hoping you find a couple beauties for a salt fix soon; we all understand that! Just lucky to have been on vacation so I could get mine taken care of. :):):) Susie

Love to see your beautiful salts.
This salt is very special for me. I traveled in Mexico - we had one day in Puebla - they had a flea-market and my eyes immediatly found the two-colored salt. It has PUEBLA stamped/pattern in the blue bottom (1890 - 1900)

95 Debi Raitz★ 01-13-2014 02:14 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	I was so excited to learn last year that the Antiques Roadshow was going to be in Detroit in June. I guess they had not been back to Detroit since they began the show many years earlier. But my excitement was dashed when I learned tickets were at least $500. I guess only rich people with very expensive antiques and collectibles can afford to go. It sure doesn't appear that way when you watch the show on TV. Anyone else have the show in their city in the recent past? Just curious if

	anyone else knows what ticket prices were in their locations. Carolyn: Your wood handled double appears to be Bayel #BY 1527 in the 1923 French catalog. This is a rare instance where the descriptions are with the salts and the translation of "tige bois" is "rod wood". So wood handles were original to some doubles. Edited 01-13-2014 02:16 PM

Well, I may have managed to finish taking down all the Christmas things tomorrow, and the dog goes in to have her stitches removed on Friday, so more photos then. I got this one recently and have not looked it up at all. No markings.

I think I'll have to break up my row of flags (at the bottom of each country) into two rows now. On your #116 I thought it looked a lot like the Polish one, but I can see that the bridge and rims are a little different. It sure is close though. Might be just a drawing error. 187 Mary Kern	Hi JANE - DI 20 is one of my little guys - He is only 3" long - 1 5/8" across and 1 3/8" tall and very strange for a Lacy with no side stippling

01-19-2014 01:51 PM ET (US) IP: 72.220.213.56	- Clear as a bell - similar to some of the "basket" salts - ie: Fruit and such --- Okay JYTTE - Just wanted you to know I had your back front and both sides covered -- lol NANCY - I think divided vs double is like master vs table - all the same - It was posted some time ago somewhere in open salt land that someone who had been traveling found a divided/doubled master/table salt at a restaurant with salt in one side and paprika in the other - Maybe that was a new version of their use and then again maybe a carry over from the past -- Unfortunately Martha Stewart/or/Steward was not around to splain it all to us -- All of the "age experienced" people I have talked to over the years - remember the bowls and even some the spoons - but none of them ever saw a divided/doubled -- Even my granny that knowingly and with great glee cursed me with this obsession had no info to pass along --

190 Debi Raitz★ 01-20-2014 07:53 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	We call them double salts but I am pretty sure in Europe they were used for salt and pepper. They made infinitely more of them in Europe than US glassmakers made. Maybe US makers made them to satisfy European immigrant consumers in the late 1800s. And open salts in general continued to be made longer in European countries than over here. There are not many open salts made past 1910-20 over here but there's still catalog pages full of them in France, Germany and other European countries. Whatever their intended purpose or marketing ploy, they could be used for whatever the consumer wanted them for, salt &amp; pepper, salt &amp; paprika, salt &amp; mustard (with pepper in a shaker), two types of salt, etc. NOTE: Even in old foreign catalogs, they were called "Double Salts" if you check the translations on some of the old catalogs where I also have the price pages included.

Hi Mary,
I just took these photo's to upload when I saw your new baby salt. I have it's brother (obviously separated at birth.) I guess you could say they only hold a pinch of salt. The one with the metal holder has the same size bowls and I think it is French.

This double or divided salt was made by Sowerby And dated around 1890 as far as I can tell.

It is not as classy as the French One Debi, very basic like a number of the plain and coloured ones attributed to many makers. Mary, you can have it, PICK UP only.
223 Janelle Jefferson 01-26-2014 02:07 AM ET (US) IP: 124.170.225.111	Ok, it worked, on my iPad the photo is the correct way up, on my PC it is upside down. So Jytte it is not how you are sending the photo's but how they are taken. And some iPads and tablets will detect if it is upside down and correct the orientation whereas PC's will not. You can lock the tablet so it does not rotate or just remember that the home button is on the right when taking a shot. I guess it is a good feature that no matter how you pick up the iPad , you can use it that way unless you want to take photo's. Now we just have to remember to do correctly so everyone can see it the right way up. J

229 Debi Raitz★ 01-28-2014 11:40 AM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	I believe what Inez was putting together several years ago for the West Virginia Museum of American Glass (WVMAG) was on center handled dishes and serving pieces. That included a lot of double salts and several salt collectors sent pictures to Inez. If she has a book on salts I am unaware of it but I'm sure she'll let us know about it. Yes, there would be times when a salt will fit into several categories and maybe even month after month. They should still be posted even if we just saw them one or two months ago. If we never reposted items then I guess this monthly topic would be obsolete. The other day I went through some of the past topics and ended up spending well over an hour just looking at what everyone else has. It's a fun way to pass some time. The diversity of open salts is truly amazing. Anyone remember first seeing the H&amp;J book 5000 Open Salts and thinking there couldn't possibly be that many? Turns out there's more than 10

	times that amount! I wish more people would post pictures regularly, but we still see plenty to drool over, don't we? What Janelle said is very true. Many years ago, I remember that meetings were the only time to see other's salts and talk about them. And that was only true for people who got a chance to attend meetings. Quick Topic has changed that and it helps keep our collections on our minds much more often. And it easily brings people together from all over the world. So glad we have people from Australia, Denmark and Canada who chat here regularly with us. I know there are a lot more lurkers I wish would join in. We'd love to hear about and see more collections. Maybe people don't know they can type in any language they want and we can translate it. And they could do the same. It's very easy to do now with a simple click on the mouse.

Is it possible that what we call a double with a toothpick holder is actually a small vase or posy? There's a catalog image of one of these that looks like it has a small fitting to hold a flower so it can't fall out.

I need to find that catalog image so you can see what I mean. Makes it look like it would be hard for any liquid to spill out unless you turned it upside down...and if you did that, why worry if the spices were wet or not all over the table? Already a lost cause.
I'm going to change over to the china and other material doubles in a little bit. I didn't sleep again last night so I may be turning in early this evening. If anyone has more to add, just use the last month link at the top of the page.

266 Debi Raitz★ 02-17-2014 12:35 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.220.22	I was just adding another old catalog picture to Zabkowice, Poland and noticed that the last two salt pictures posted look a lot like one shown in the 1910 and 1920 catalogs.

I remember posting my green one some time ago and one of the collectors knowledgeable about older salts suggesting a possible country of origin, but I've lost track of any information I had. I may be thinking of a vaseline one about this size that isn't divided. I'm thinking an attribution to Poland is likely. I've never heard of the name Zabkowice--place or factory? I'll check that now.
