I've found other Cane patterned salts in my collection and because they have sterling rims or pedestals with English marks I assume they are from the UK. This one may be an import also.

I could not believe how difficult it was for me to find and open salt that was square, Lots of rectangles, but not many squares in the sets I collect. #D1464, 62 shillings. I am too lazy to find the catalog page, it was just for a jobber not a maker anyway.

Three square Hartford salts? As PJ indicated in her posting #52, the left one is supposed to be the master, it is 2 1/8 inches square and 2 3/4 inches tall. It is pictured in Coddington 25-2-3. The middle one is 2 1/2 inches square and 2 1/4 inches tall, about the right size to be a master salt. The top is not scalloped like the other two, so may have had a top. Is it the mustard? I have seen pictures of the middle salt with the sides pushed out into a round shape as if to make a sauce, however this one does not seem large enough to be a sauce.

In the Weatherman Fostoria book there is only two pages showing the 501 HARTFORD pattern. I posted one of them in /m56 and this is the other. Neither shows the master salt, the toothpick or any sauce dishes for comparison.

In looking again at Kent's flat top master and the sugar without a lid the top plain band on the sugar is wider so I do not think Kent's salt is a sugar minus the lid.

Question for any EAPG people...What is the best book that lists all the different pieces in the patterns? I have several but don't know what the best source is. Maybe I should say the most reliable and accurate information.

Mary: Maybe one of these months we should just let you post all your Fritz salts. You have an amazing array of them. This one with a square top reminds me of a circus tent. They are all so colorful. I absolutely LOVE the two special Fritz salts I have.

IP: 69.14.123.141
87 Kent Hudson 03-03-2015 12:58 AM ET (US) IP: 72.84.246.11	Debi, I should have checked your References for Fostoria Open Salts. Under the Hartford pattern there is a picture of my salt with the flat edge and the same dimensions as mine. Also, under the Coddington section, the entry for 25-2-3 has been changed from "Pattern Glass HARTFORD pattern, square bowl and foot" as it is in my printed copy, to "Pattern Glass HARTFORD pattern toothpick, master salt is wider". Also, on February 1, 2015, Ed Bowman sold a toothpick on EBAY that matches the dimensions of the Coddington 25-2-3. He doesn't mention anything about it being a salt. Is Ed Bowman the expert we are looking for?
88 Kent Hudson 03-03-2015 01:20 AM ET (US) IP: 72.84.246.11	There is also a Hartford creamer and uncovered sugar currently listed on EBAY. According to the listing: "The creamer is 4 5/8" to the top of the handle and about 3 5/8" square in the middle of the piece. The sugar dish is 4 " inches in height and about 3 1/2" square in the middle of the piece." These measurements are more consistent with what I would expect of a creamer and sugar from this period and over an inch larger each way than my salt. Apparently, there was a top to the salt, or it may have been a mustard which usually had a top. Not made very long, so probably not very many made.
89 Debi Raitz★ 03-03-2015 03:40 AM ET (US) IP: 69.14.123.141	Kent: Some of that information came from either Ed Berg or Rod Elser when I put that page together years ago. There isn't any backup proof for some of it. I just went with what they told me on some of it so some might be wrong. I don't know that I ever had any proof of a HARTFORD master salt or what it looked like. Obviously there are a couple pieces in the HARTFORD line that could pass for a master salt and one of them probably is, but which one? I have tried to update some information over the years, like adding some more colors and the reproductions. I don't think anyone has ever been able to supply any of the missing images. I asked earlier about any EAPG books that had reliable pattern pieces information. I got out the two biggest ones I have and HARTFORD isn't in either one. Either are some other Fostoria patterns so I guess they aren't very reliable at all or maybe they only list patterns that have full lines of dinnerware, not just tableware. I read somewhere that tableware consists of serving pieces, condiments, etc. and dinnerware includes plates, cups, saucers, etc. It sure would be nice if there was a comprehensive book on pattern glass pieces. If anyone knows of one let me know. I'm going to look at my toothpick books and see if I can find HARTFORD anywhere. I saw the creamer and sugar on eBay looking for pieces earlier. Either there was an open and a covered version of the sugar, or the one on eBay is the spooner according to the catalog pictures I have.
90 Debi Raitz★ 03-03-2015	The HARTFORD toothpick shown in "Glass Toothpick Holders" by Bredehoft and Sanford gives the size as 2-5/8" high by 2-1/4" wide. It has a rather wide plain top band with a scalloped rim.

Not sure if that indicates it's supposed to be a different pattern number or not. Seems like just an alternative piece to the pattern. It is odd it would have two different sugars and one does not match the creamer. Maybe there are other pieces without the pedestal base too. Not perfectly squared, but you can see the attempt. This piece is marked with a fake LCT, it has iridescent surface similar to Tiffany's Favrilite, but it is not up to their standards. Looks similar to OSC931-1, probably made by Iorio of Remington, New Jersey.

This may be a Salt-Want-To-Be. I found it on eBay and decided it would fit into my collection A-OK. It is made by Westmoreland Glass Co. (Has the "WG" mark on the bottom.), and is a good master salt size...2 5/8 inches square at the outside panels, 2 inches square at the rim and 2 1/8 inches high. I liked the true red color and I think I have seen the piece with a lid in some other life. Maybe a covered sugar or a trinket dish.
If anyone knows exactly what it is and has a manufacture date, please post the info.

Judy, your lovely red square piece was made as a covered trinket box, often as a souvenir piece. I've seen it in antique malls with various inscriptions on the lid. Date would be about 1900-1920.

I use the Salvation Army and/or Goodwill for that. Over the years I've taken several donations of salts and assorted tableware to them. I figure the salts find a new home and the organizations make a little money. They will provide a receipt for tax deductions if you need one.
229 Debi Raitz★ 03-09-2015 11:42 AM ET (US) IP: 69.14.123.141	Sue: Is it Walter (something)? Because he was the one at Heisey who told me they were not Heisey. Seems to me when they were compared to a known Heisey clear one, the beveling on the corners was different. He also told me my blue FANDANGO pattern salt was not Heisey but unless someone had an identical mold I still think it was made at Heisey. Maybe it was just experimental or some whimsy but it is exactly the same mold except it was not fire polished. We know it's not a repro or else there would be more out there and no one I know of ever said they had one too.

But I had to have the butterfly☺, you know me! and I would be Thrilled if you could replace the stones for me, I hate when they are missing! I thought the black was stunning, even without all the stones!! And I just bought a holder with only the big stones in it; maybe you can show me how to do it sometime:)). You are going to have to come out sometime when the weather gets nicer, maybe we will just have a mini meeting, LOL! Maybe we could get a couple more to come for fun; or maybe later on..thanks so much!!!

There are NO bad (hate this word - dumb) questions on this board !!! The only bad question is the question you fail to ask !!! We all have "gaps" in our memory !!! We all have times that we are just TOO TIRED to get out the reference books to look something up ourselves... so we put the question out to our friendly members here on the board !!! THIRD... eventually you will get to know the members and learn their "short hand" and how they post... you will get to know what is a master salt and what is a "lacy" salt (an early special salt) - you'll learn what is a art salt, what is a mold blown salt... and so on... be patient with yourself !!! The ladies and gentlemen here are VERY patient !!! Heaven knows they've put up with me for a very long time !!! FOURTH... I'm sure it's been suggested to you to look into reference books... It sounds like you've been in touch with Mary... A GREAT, GREAT mentor !!! So... you are off to a perfect start !!! Hang in there and keep reading... check the references on this board ... ASK QUESTIONS !!! Keep smiling !!! "The Salty Nut..." PJ

Hey There Nancy Carol - See you found part of the drooling experience -- In answer to your question about the Lacy salts - Yes they are called that because of the intricate design in most pieces - Though not all of them are elaborate - but more definitely called Lacy because of the time frame they were produced - About 1825 to 1850 which was considered the Lacy Period -- The4 only way we can slide them in on this month's topic is to post the picture of a double because to my knowledge there is not a square lacy to be found -- This one is from the Acorn book DI 20 and as you can see it is not quite as ornate as the pones posted by Jytte - but still a Lacy salt -
