Stars-N-Stripes

Open salts with stripes of any colors.

Open salts in combinations of red/white/blue, not one color per salt.

Open salts with stars not including rayed bottoms.

Let's add any eagles too.

It's one of my favorite salt find stories. A friend who doesn't collect salts but spends much more time scanning ebay than I do pointed it out to me some years ago. It was missing a stand and was listed as "small lid to something." With it upside down, berry on the top, the seller could only imagine that it was a tiny lid.

117 Janelle Jefferson 07-14-2015 07:06 PM ET (US) IP: 124.169.23.59	 I always wondered about this piece. 2 3/4" high 1 1/4" across. Glass seems a bit thick to drink from, and the star in the base a bit unusual, so a salt it became.

119 E. Jane Koble ★ 07-15-2015 04:06 PM ET (US) IP: 73.130.93.106	Janelle, I recently bought one shaped like that with a wide plain top. I found out it is an eggcup. It's big because back then they used all kinds of eggs, like goose eggs which are bigger than hen's eggs.
120 Debi Raitz★ 07-15-2015 07:21 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.123.141	Someone once told me there are extra small egg cups as well as larger than normal sized ones because people (especially the English) would eat all sorts of eggs. Partridge eggs are small and a couple egg cup shapes I have are way too small for a hen egg, but a smaller egg would fit. Janelle's salt might be a smaller egg cup at only 1-1/4" diameter, but there are salts with that shape so it's impossible to know for sure, unless the pattern could be identified and then what pieces were made in that pattern. Some toothpicks look like mini goblets too.
121 Janelle 07-15-2015 08:41 PM ET (US) IP: 124.171.41.49	It may be an egg cup, and like Debi mentioned it would have to be a smaller egg than what we have now. I have a couple of other "salts" that hover between egg cup or salt and it is a bit hard to know without seeing a catalogue etc.. It will have to live in the maybe section but I think it feels quite at home being a salt. ☺

The salt looks a lot like this mug I spotted in a book some years ago, but it doesn't help with any maker. I found another catalog image it also resembles I can post next.

This is a Reijmyre (Sweden) circa 1860-1890 catalog page. #2156 is very similar too. We all know that styles and patterns were freely copied between the US and Europe back then so unless we see an identical catalog image, or the piece is marked, it's nearly impossible to know for sure who made something. I bought the cobalt one from a US eBay seller, but don't know where he got it.

You do great with the catalogs, Debi. I really meant to ask about the origin of your #190, the blue and white pottery one. I'm not much into pottery, but that one is so attractive.

Jane: One salt I have always wanted that still eludes me is a blue and white spongeware. I like your #219 also. Does it have a bridge on it anywhere? The design looks like Blue Willow, but not the traditional one.

IP: 69.14.123.141	 Nancy V: I misunderstood your question. This is the mark on #190. It's Taylor Tunnecliff, or something like that. I probably misspelled the name.

232 E. Jane Koble★ 07-29-2015 05:00 PM ET (US) IP: 174.55.22.195	 Nancy - I "stole" this picture. It is Lincoln Drape. It does kind of look like Debi's.
233 Debi Raitz★ 07-29-2015 06:14 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.123.141	I think the swag is the only thing these two have in common. LINCOLN DRAPE is EAPG. I'm not sure what I have is American glass at all. I sure wish it was easier to find out makers. Sure wish I was closer to the Corning Research Library. There's so many catalogs they have that aren't available online. If there was an inexpensive way to get copies of the pages with salts it sure would help.
