Possibly my favorite cranberry, Moser table salt with underplot. I didn't realize how many salts I have in the red, cranberry, pink range, but I had noticed as I collect that these colors seems to dominate in salts. Is it just me, or or there more in this color range, especially in art glass?

Darn auto-correct. I wrote under plate but as one word, and it got auto-changed to underplot. I need to go back to written work habit of checking before hitting submit.

One more, and then I have to run. More later.

Nancy V: Your Moser is gorgeous. Weird that underplate is not a word but underplot is. I just got a red line under both of them and am going to add underplate to my dictionary.
Jytte: Love that Royal Brierley. Are they recent? Is that a pair I see?
Linda H: If I'm not mistaken your #17 is a copper frame. It might clean up really well. It is H&J 874 but the description is wrong. I had one once with the original manufacturer's label saying the copper was mined out west somewhere. Can't remember now. Love the amethyst pedestal and if I could help you out with other colors of the Davidson I would. I thought I had a yellow with white top but couldn't find it.

Janelle, your earlier posting of the Webb #27 confirmed for me that this one of mine is Webb Burmese. I love both of them in the soft looking pink, mine fading to yellow on the base. And it has a butterfly.

I love this maker. This is the only one I have. Mary just had one on ebay but I keep spending my money on grand kids. My salt withdrawal is starting to overtake me though. I hate not having my salts at my finger tips. I hate not getting new salts. Grand kids may have to take a back seat.

Pass the towells to me also. So many of these salts tick my boxes. Jytte, that 129 is gorgeous and from my limited knowledge I would say Bohemian. Is it the same size as the blue ones. My 104 may not be a salt,(who said that!) but it is now. The only other thing I could think of is maybe a beauty patch stand. As I said it is small.

I have saved your picture to add to that page in the H&J Project. That project is not dead, just hard to get all the pictures with only a half dozen people contributing. These are all so beautiful that they may out-do the blues in my mind. Sorry, Debi, but you do have some lovely pinks below.
Susie, the stain on the group you show is called ruby stain by collectors of that type. Ruby and amber stain collectors paid prices well above what salt collectors thought was right for those back "in the day." I sold salts to them and years later, bought ones like them back into my collection for pennies on the dollar. Your Shoshone, in the middle, is rare to find stained, and I never got back one of that pattern. I posted some I have way back down these pages.

It would only hurt for minute Janelle, while you're trying to decide which one to keep. You'd still have one of them to look at. I guess I just never understood the "pair" mentality. I was always happy to find a pair and be able to sell one for sometimes more than I paid for both of them. Or at least more than half the purchase price. That definitely made me happier than having a pair.

331 nancy Villaverde 10-25-2017 02:05 PM ET (US) IP: 97.99.220.53	I wonder if ordinary fan and diamond bowls with a flat base were drilled to allow a screw attachment to a silver base? Could have been done originally to attach glass by one maker to silver base by another. I'm not suggesting a seller combined the two.
332 Janelle 10-25-2017 05:33 PM ET (US) IP: 203.59.66.81	This particular set has a glass peg much the same as the tulip salts, the peg has the indentations so it can screw into holder, the base is marked foreign also. I have never seen another one the same so I have never found out any more about it. The electroplating does not seem to be as good as well known English makers.
