This Salazar salt was the only one I found in my picture files. I'll have to look through my salts but I can't think of any other hearts I might have except for one.

Believe this is a Mosser Multi-Sided salt H&J 526, 434, 394. The MAJOR difference is the hearts that where created by sand blasting the designs on the exterior. The hearts are smooth ...The glass has a satin look and feel.

I guess I don't have much heart; the only heart salt I can spot is like the picture Janelle posted. Mine is deep cranberry with 7 pulled feet, clear handle, and 2 1/2" across. The point of the heart isn't shaped well to be a spout, so I don't think it's a creamer.

37 nancy Villaverde 02-06-2017 02:00 PM ET (US)	 Norwegian beautifully cased and polished, probably like Jytte's group. Fully signed but hard to read. Jytte may have full information on her site. Looks black but is deep purple heavily cased in clear. Not exactly heart shaped because there is no valley at the top, just rounded with point at the bottom. Edited 02-06-2017 02:01 PM
38 nancy Villaverde 02-06-2017 02:12 PM ET (US)	Actually, my piece below appears to be Nuutajarvi notsjo from Finland. Now I remember that pieces like this were listed as by Kaj Frank, but this has a different signature, hard to read. Dated, seems to be 55, which would be the right period. Edited 02-06-2017 02:27 PM
39 Debi Raitz ★ 02-06-2017 07:09 PM ET (US)	I figured we might run out of heart shapes pretty early, so after Valentine's Day let's open it up to the other card shapes of clubs, spades and diamonds.
40 nancy Villaverde 02-07-2017 12:46 PM ET (US)	Sounds like a good idea, Debi. I'm bumbling around as usual, finally realized the signature on my cased heart below really is Kaj Franck. I mistook the K and F as initials H and T rather than the K and capital F of Franck. Etched script is to hard to make out. These were around on the internet quite a bit some years ago but seem to have disappeared. I think they were called walnut shaped or something similar.
