2 nancy Villaverde 08-02-2017 08:27 PM ET (US) IP: 97.99.220.53	 I think this salt qualifies as ocean blue. I'm giving it away as a bonus on a current eBay auction since it once failed to get any interest on its own. It's 2" wide, unmarked.

Possibly Moser, looks a lot like some bowls in the Gary Baldwin book on Moser art glass, and it isn't true cobalt, just a deep blue.

Shiny Lundberg opaque glass, outside a true blue, like a beetle. Some of these make me apologize for photos that don't show true color. This is one.

	Funny little Lundberg pot that might be a toothpick since it's a little taller than it is wide. Nice blue sheen though.

Blue and white cased glass. I think it's Webb.
I do have lots of blue salts but most are cobalt blue. The pictures I do have are not the best because they are older ones. Just don't have the energy to retake hundreds or thousands of pictures at this point. As I do my separate cases I am taking the pictures but they do not apply to the recent topics we have done. I do have good pictures of all of my Wedgwood so I'll post those blue ones.

I must go see what I have that is not cobalt - must have some though cobalt is my front and center - also cannot keep Junior off my keyboard - I told a friend about his obsession for my keyboard and she dug out her old one she is not using and dropped it off for him - He hates - Trying to get him to lay on it long enough to send her a picture and then I can remove it from my desk and just go back to fighting for finger space and fixing whatever his paws create or remove -

The blue Heisey FANDANGO is a mystery. It is exactly like the clear in every way but I had the Heisey Museum curator look at it when we had a MOSS meeting there and he would not acknowledge it was Heisey. I don't understand why couldn't just say it must have been made by a worker and was either a one of a kind or very rare. But he said it wasn't even Heisey. It was obviously made with their mold because no one else made anything like it.

I suppose it's very difficult to be sure of maker, especially if molds were sold when factories closed. Did that happen with Heisey molds? The curator might have been reluctant to support rarity as a Heisey piece and therefore higher value.

IP: 97.99.220.53
136 Debi Raitz★ 08-08-2017 01:21 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.123.141	I think Heisey is just about the ONLY company where the molds are in the hands of the Heisey Collectors Society so Heisey items can't be reproduced. There was the situation with the Heisey CRYSTOLITE swan that Boyd had and used but those were marked with the B in a diamond. When the collectors society discovered that, they bought the mold back from Boyd. So it's not possible that the FANDANGO salt was reproduced by someone else. I just think a worker made it as a whimsy. We have all heard how workers made things like that. I think there's an entire book on Heisey whimsies. Edited 08-10-2017 01:20 PM
137 nancy Villaverde 08-08-2017 03:18 PM ET (US) IP: 97.99.220.53	Thanks for more background, Debi. I know there are lots of individual unmarked salts that came out of Lundberg, colors and designs like marked pieces, but supposedly made after hours or end-of-day by glass blowers and not marked. Of course, that's different from salts that were made in molds.

I am quite surprised at all the Cobalt salts I have outside of the liners in frames - Even in my pottery - So when we do cobalt next month I should be able to really participate -- More later - but til then an Art Reid in blue and I shall be back later - contrary to what I think and it being Sunday - I do have some chores yet to do this day

So many blue shades. I think Debi suggested we can have a special cobalt showing next month. I'm saving a couple though I don't have a lot of blue of any shade and only two cobalt in glass.
Thanks for another, Mary, and Jytte, I love love the heavy Astrid Ericson. It's a style that looks very old though made in 1960.

I also got several nice salts from Linda Kelsey. I have fond memories of her, visited her in England and stayed in her "caravan park" more than once. I suggested the SF convention to her, was sorry there wasn't more market there for some salts she was offering to have made by a fine contemporary English glass maker Jonathan Harris. A few of us purchased prototypes she had with her. Here's a picture I saved of her display. A photo above the salts showed HRH Prince Charles with Harris.
