thanks Jane & Nancy. I was out of town and didn't have time to post anything the first part of the month, except for the picture of the bee from my phone, so took a break from chores and posted what I could find. I might post a few more of the ones I bought while we were away later.

Thanks for getting the category going again in a big way, Linda. Belleek porcelain is always so lovely, and I like your double too. I cut my collection back so sharply that it's always a pleasure to see so many of each type.

Hi Nancy V, it is not marked, but the seller Said KPM. There is a similar salt lake n pg 196 in the OSC, and it says KPM? So not positive, but pretty sure!

I just checked H&J and it calls the small piece a toothpick holder. I suppose I mistook it for an individual salt. The book also refers to the salts as doubles, but the small figures' legs extend into the bowls with no complete divider in the centers.

I've had this pair of boy and girl standing in shells for years. They are rather crudely made. They are shown in the last few pages of H&J in black and white pages. There is a small individual salt with them, which I show with the girl. I think there would have been a set of several of the individuals with the larger table salts.

I don't have many shells, but I've always loved this Royal Worcester, so delicate it's nearly transparent, and a lovely shade of green.

I think the "squirrel on shell" is just a Silver Artist who got "carried away, and didn't know when to stop!! Squirrel's and swans don't go together! NEAT though!

I think those are Phoenix birds Mary, and they are spectacular. They have that little tuft on the top of their heads. Lots of detail. Very nice. With all the silver doubles you have you probably have several shells. Happy to see you playing with your salts. They are calming at times.

Another swan with shell - this time Austrian and not sure why - but a squirrel is riding along on top - Perhaps a nut or two might have found its way in the shell in its previous life before it changed into a salt
