Thanks Mary!!!!
The salt is made in Odense, Denmark about 1860.....and then it has been given to/from some in Greenland....
At last a pair ended at/by Mary .....and she offered me to buy one.....I love it very much

My only unusual winged salt is this one, sweet little cherub with painted wings pushing a wheelbarrow. It's made of some kind of plastic or composite but it's so beautifully molded. Stamped on one side of the base Depose Italy 187 and a tiny 6-pointed mark.

Depose is not a company. From an internet search: Depose—ca. 1900: Depose is the French word for "registered".

Ok, but you have to admit it does look very much like early Fontanini, and the mark on the right could be their early spider mark

I knew the meaning of depose, so depose Italy would mean simply registered in Italy, probably for export. I suppose the number is a design number, and the funny little mark is likely a maker's mark. I suppose it does look a little like a spider, Linda. Thanks for the suggestion. Because of the material, I've always supposed it is of little value. It would be gorgeous in porcelain.

I put "Depose Italy 187" in a Bing search. Also found the below link on Etsy. If you read the text it does sound like this is Fontanini made of a polymer resin. The mark also dates it, spider earlier than fountain mark. Personally, I've never

I wondered what the wheelbarrow was for, really doubting that it is a salt. As I suspected, even with a fine pedigree it isn't very valuable.

Linda, scroll to the bottom of the link above to see what Ed Bowman said about this salt. I know that Riverside joined National Glass in 1899, but this salt is not shown in the Riverside catalog and no Salty Comments mentions it as a Riverside salt. Richards & Hartley made the similar one without the berry. Salty Comments says the one without the berry has not been reproduced, but the one with the berry is modern. Link below.

Jane, that dopplewandglas looks in remarkable condition. Because of age most are quite chipped. The ovals usually are in better shape than the portrait ones with points all around. Lovely black glass bucket.

Thank you, Nancy. The Dopplewandglas is nearly mint. I love that bucket, too.

Covered swan.

New topic? We haven't done flowers in awhile. Or Art glass? I'm not good at suggesting.

Well Nancy D, you're a big contributor every month so what kind of salts do YOU have that would make a good topic? We've never done anything like Top Shelf Salts. That would be higher priced ones like Tiffany, Steuben, Daum and fancy art glass. Everyone has a few of those, don't we? Maybe not a lot but they would be fun to see.

That would be a good topic. And we can see everyone's favorites - although cheap salts can be favorites, too.
