283 Debi Raitz ★ 05-29-2019 08:48 PM ET (US)	Maybe the makers just thought flower colors leaned more toward a cranberry or yellow/vaseline color rather than blue or green. It's more beautiful than contemporary salts. Newer salts, like Mosser, Summit, Wright, Smith and others. What do you think Jane? Got all your intaglios in holders photographed?

288 Susie P★ 05-30-2019	I love intaglios in holders; haven't found any to buy in forever! I know there are lots of folks here with wonderful collections! I would just drool all month, ha! Debi, your blue art glass salts are Stupendous!

09:36 AM ET (US)	Lots of beauty this month!!
289 Nancy C Villaverde ★ 05-30-2019 01:28 PM ET (US)	I'm not sure if there is a definite date for calling a salt of contemporary make. Of course all the Convention salts would be contemporary, but I'm afraid most of the salts I consider contemporary are reproduction or strings of the same shape made in every color the makers could imagine to keep selling to people who need one in every color. Can you tell I'm no fan of these?
290 E. Jane Koble★ 05-30-2019 08:46 PM ET (US)	I wasn't even thinking of those salts when I said that. I'm not a fan, either, but I have a lot porcelain and pottery reproductions of old salts.
291 Linda H 05-31-2019 10:11 AM ET (US)	Both contemporary and intaglio are great suggestions. I think Contemporary would be best defined as any made after WWII. That would include Deganhart, and most repros. Some of the Japanese ones might be hard to date, and so are Cambridge, Westmoreland, Heisey etc.

What a beautiful calming month this has been - I have been checking in once in a while so thank you for pleasant viewing this month - I have some to post and will do them during the course of the day so as not to fill up your computer with incoming announcements -
DRESDEN SAXONY - this is one of my sub-collections but I only have a couple of them with pictures - So much to do - so far behind - End of the year I will be caught up - lol lol

I purchased this set from a dealer at the Wednesday show - They all brought me salts that they had found during the month - These are not only beautiful but they are the smallest in my collection - We are talking maybe the size of a nickel -- Unbelievable
