1 Debi Raitz★ 10-01-2020 02:26 AM ET (US) IP: 67.149.133.228	Another month of this miserable year gone. Let's see condiment sets and any matching open salts with pepper shakers. Glass, china, pottery and plastic all welcome, but please, no double salts or divided salts. We can do that another time. Blue and white chintz open salt with matching shaker. Could also be an egg cup and salt shaker. We may never know...

All my condiments are still packed..... I should be able to figure out which box. I'm down to my last 10 or 15 boxes. Only took me 3 years. I had them all photographed till I pushed delete and lost 800 photos. Still gives me heartaches.

I have some china ones for which i have no pictures, so later with them
Here are a few glass ones.

Cranberry shaded to clear cut glass. Three pieces, open salt, pepper shaker, mustard jar without spoon.

Cut glass set of four pieces that came in an unremarkable wire holder. I substituted a pressed glass holder, so it's a marriage, but the set looked so much nicer in the glass holder. It's the standard open salt, pepper shaker, mustard jar, and a vinegar bottle.

I thought of the possibility that my little china set could be for boiled eggs and a salt shaker rather than condiment bowls because the depressions are so shallow. Eggs wouldn't set very securely however. Egg cups are usually much deeper.

Susie, that blue shaded to clear set is luscious. I covet it.

I bent the rules with the incomplete set with the tall toothpick holder/handle. I put two open salts in the places of what would have been other bottles or shakers, condiment set.

I finally found two sets on eBay with the glass stand. This one is listed as Daisy & Button, which the bottles clearly are. The stand however looks like a completely different pattern. It's the same stand as I've always seen with the D&B bottles, so maybe the stand was made and the easily available D&B bottles paired with it. The glass on this one looks yellow in all the photos, and I've written to ask the seller about that. I've never seen it except with clear glass, the exception being my blue toothpick handle.

Just got a reply from the seller, and sure enough the glass is clear. All photos are this pretty yellow. No mention of color or lack of it in the description. I suggested one might be added.

Inez, if you come by I'd like any information you have about the stand.

Found it, Debi, Belmont #103 not #130. Shown in a picture of three different color combo, the blue center post shown with three clear Daisy and Button bottles. I wish I had the colored bottles, some sets shown with clear, blue, and amber colored bottles. I just purchased two more clear pieces, the cruet with stopper and a mustard bottle. It's nice to get an old piece put back together. Of course, it's not with a salt so very off-topic here.

Lynda LaLonde, I am so sorry to see all the broken salts. We have had some near misses, and have put lengths of PVC pipe along each shelf in case it starts to fail. Someone else was saying they slipped metal sleeves along the glass. I don't know how to do that. PJ I am so glad to see you! We have been away, to the beach, but will be returning home next week. I don't have much in the way of condiment set photos with me. This one is unmarked, but from the UK or Europe.

The Carlton Ware set is lovely, Inez. Thanks for the Belmont #103 drawing. On the chat page, Debi gave me the Belmont name which let me find mine on catalog pages. The unknown named one is a bit different in stand and bottles, as is McKee Champion. PJ's set looks like Belmont #103 if I'm seeing it right. PJ, descriptions I've seen call the top of the center post a toothpick holder though it could be used to hold a candle I suppose. It's deep enough to be a toothpick holder.

All of you and your sets just amaze me. These are beyond beautiful. I'm a glass girl but will have to admit these condiment china sets thrill me. I don't have any of the large sets but am in love with the glass holders. All my sets are tiny with an open salt. I'll find the box someday. Here is the picture of the little English or German souvenir. There should be different names for these pieces. The all in one are very different than the sets that can be pulled apart.

Lynda, my little souvenir set is way down at #60, and it has the emblem Bear with the Ragged Staff, motif of the Earl of Warwick. I was in Warwick, England several times but have no idea where I got this little set. Mine isn't very well made, one of the parts sets slightly askew in its holder. I think they were pretty cheap like many souvenirs.

Inez, we were having so many spam posts each day that we had to require a sign in to post on the main page now. You only have to make up a password for it, no other registration required. Love your sets and your knowledge about them.

About that oval block salt...if it isn't McKee it doesn't matter. We just need some pictures of it when you get a chance. No one here has one but it is the one pictured in H&J except yours has ruby stain.

Inez, clicking on enlargements of your sets is like visiting a great museum. I agree with Lynda that the blue glass fading to clear is just luscious. And then Debi added some more to linger over. I didn't know there were so many lovely condiment sets.

I seldom see any salts I'd like in antique malls or on the internet sales, and I think maybe it's because we collectors have all the good ones tied up. Jeffrey Evans auctions are an exception.

This is a weird one...figured it would have 2 servings of salt and 2 servings of pepper and 1 serving of mustard in the center and would be held between 2 people at one time???? Who knows ??? I've never seen another piece like this one???

This month has been a joy. Wish I had found my condiment sets but they would be no comparison to these. P J, Inez, everyone, thank you. I never knew all this beauty was out there. What fun. I have a question.... condiment versus castor set... what is the difference?

I have really enjoyed seeing the condiment sets. My guess would be that

Don Rabourn★ 10-28-2020 04:50 PM ET (US) IP: 108.94.47.73	to be called a Caster Set, it would have to contain bottles(not just salt, pepper and mustard.
369 Nancy C Villaverde★ 10-28-2020 05:45 PM ET (US) IP: 97.99.220.53	I think you're right, Don. Seems to generally work that way. When I was hunting for some with the glass base that held bottles like I have, I found them by putting "castor set" into search. Nothing when I had searched condiment sets. I have also been pleasantly surprised by the condiment set topic. Part of the joy was how many beautiful sets Inez shared. Edited 10-28-2020 05:46 PM
