I've always been primarily into glass salts, but I can't resist really pretty salts of any type. Here are a few pottery masters.

My only Moorcroft piece that is the right size to be a master salt, 3" or a little less in diameter.

Anemone pattern.

I looked up the marks for my majolica salt and still don't know anything except maybe a location, Hanley. D B & Co could be Davenport, Banks & Co, Davenport, Beck & Co, or Dunn, Bennett & Co. I think it's from about 1875.

This is a saki cup like those in Lynda's #49. The outside is an ogre or devil, the inside, a sweet face. When a person drinks, the one opposite him sees the ogre. A kind of joke.

Debi, I may be remembering the trencher salt at #30. So many have passed through my hands. Of course I got a firm grip on some and haven't let go yet.

I'm loving this topic too. Nancy D has some lovely ones. I'd love the pair of trencher salts, damage or no.

I have some oldies of the saki cup faces. My sister found a complete set of the Immortals, 7 or 8, I've forgotten which. She had a framer mount them all together, and they made a great wall display. I have only 5 and two are duplicates of the same face from two different sets. I particularly like the only woman in the group. I'll see if I have a photo to post.

Nancy D, I think your face salts/saki cups are devils, not the same as the Immortals.

Here are the five saki cups I have. I declare them in my salt collection, keep them on stands to show the faces in a wall cabinet. The two at lower right are the same character, one from a smaller sized group.

How wide is the bowl, Lynda? Moorcroft made very few salts. I posted the smallest I have in their series of round bowls, low foot, even the one I have probably not intended as a salt. I have one pedestal Moorcroft, individual size, only salt of theirs I've seen.

Yours looks like their lusterware work. Some have beautiful designs in the bowl.

It does say Moorcroft but hard for me to see. Bowl size is...well, not master size. 2 1/8" wide by 2 1/8" tall. The glaze is shinny. The blue stripe under the rim isn't well done.
I don't have much pottery for this catagory. I have some Daultons, but not as pretty as yours. They'Re still packed with some Irish salts. I'll try to find them.

Lynda: That's why I say to take a picture of the mark because it enlarges well and you can see it better than with a magnifying glass. That goes especially for silver hallmarks. I have one of those luster type Moorcroft too but I'm sure it isn't a salt. Mine is larger though, probably about 3" diameter.

Have you seen the luster pieces by Moorcroft called something like Fairyland? Those designs are beautiful. I saw a small one in England once and have been sorry I didn't buy it.

Nancy V: I thought those Fairyland lustre salts were by Wedgwood. Don't have one so I'm unsure.

Several years ago, I bought something that I remember being called Wedgwood Fairy Luster, NOT Fairyland Luster. Right now I cant find which case it's in to check it, and I've got to be ready to go to our Church in 20 minutes!! I'll try later.

I may not remember the name correctly,Don. It was back in the early 90's that I was seeing some of those Wedgwood luster bowls.

Just put Wedgwood Fairyland Luster into Google and got a page of the bowls I remember.

Zsolnay is still in business in Hungary, with a distributor in Colorado. I hope this link works - https://zsolnay.com/shop/7-eosin?id_category=7&n=195 - Go down to row 8. I remember seeing this "girl with basket" many, many years ago. It was called a salt at an antique show but I thought it was a bit large to be an open salt. The iridescence on it is amazing though.

My salt is in the Smith books, probably one of the last books. Carol Van Norman had a pair and was supplying pictures to the Smiths. They asked about it and ended up buying one of them from Carol. Mine is the one Carol had.

The salt Debi is asking about is the 5th on the shelf not the 4th. But I loved seeing the 4th up close. I think she's asking about the bumpy one next to it. I could look at your 4 shelves for hours. So beautiful.

149 E. Jane Koble★ 01-27-2020 07:15 PM ET (US) IP: 98.237.105.243	Debi, I looked when I bought the salt and just looked again and can't find anything. Wish I could!
150 Nancy C Villaverde★ 01-29-2020 01:40 PM ET (US) IP: 97.99.220.53	Debi, on the Zsolnay company--the link worked. The width of the Girl with Basket is given as 2 5/8, which would probably be the width of the basket, well within size to call it a salt I'd think. Entire piece is pretty chunky. The salt you posted below looks old. I didn't look around to see how long Zsolnay has been in business.
151 Debi Raitz★ 01-29-2020 05:29 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.255.241	Nancy V: I remember seeing one at an antique show a long time ago and thought it looked rather large to be a salt. I guess everyone has their own opinion on what the size should be. You're right, it is rather chunky. And I didn't really care for the greenish color. It reminds me of antifreeze or some sort of nuclear waste. I like the golden iridescent salts like Tiffany but that green was rather ghoulish.
152 Debi Raitz★ 01-29-2020 05:40 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.255.241	Here's a link to the company history and marks. Mine has the mark that mostly resembles the impressed company name and "PECS" and dates to the 1870's. https://www.theoldstuff.com/en/porcelain-m...y/228-zsolnay-marks
153 Debi Raitz★ 01-29-2020 05:41 PM ET (US) IP: 69.14.255.241	So are we going to do individual china salts next month or is there another suggestion?
154 E. Jane Koble★ 01-29-2020 09:08 PM ET (US) IP: 98.237.105.243	Sounds good - that'll take me the whole month!
155 Don Rabourn 01-30-2020 09:23 AM ET (US) IP: 108.94.47.73	I think that would be a good category too, Debi! But It might be less "monumental" to do one type at a time! Like Nippon, Germany, Austria, etc! Just a suggestion! Don
156 Nancy C Villaverde★ 01-30-2020 11:49 AM ET (US) IP: 97.99.220.53	Thanks for dating the Zsolnay salt of yours and confirming my thought about aged, Debi. With a few exceptions, I have little or no interest in new salts and reproductions.
157 Lynda LaLonde★ 01-30-2020 01:01 PM ET (US) IP: 151.213.164.108	Don's idea is good. Would be nice to see just one company at a time. But how many of us are that organised that we have our China salts placed by maker? I sure do'nt. Mine are mostly in cabinets and would be hard for me to get at. Plus we'd have to turn them all over to see who made what. That's a lot of work on top of taking the pictures and writing information. Not to put Don's idea down cause I really like it. Also, just a thought, I'm thinking most of us have a lot of China ones. (I do, much to my surprise) Maybe we should do or show groups of 5 or more. Otherwise I think we'll have massive amounts of pictures. Totally up to you Debi, just my 2 cents.
158 Debi Raitz★ 01-30-2020 05:01 PM ET (US)	Maybe some of you know your salts well enough to know which ones are marked. What if we just do the marked ones and just say what the mark is, like Austria, or Nippon? You don't need to post a picture of the mark unless you want to. We only have about 5 people posting here regularly so I need to have large categories or there would be no pictures posted.
