These are really Chinese lily pots but they make good salts.

Both of these are in a foo dog pattern, sort of a blend of dog and lion. Debi recently posted one in a very rare color.

Marked Clarice Cliff. I love her designs from the early 20th century.

Last one, probably a child's compote, bought at an antiques sale held near an open salt convention in SF years ago, 2001? Precious few salts to be found. Dealers told me they would have brought more if they had known the convention was in town. This is my souvenir for that convention.

Nancy, Who cares if #72 was made as a Salt? It's lovely, and makes a Great Salt! "Flow Blue" type Salts are "few and far between", and That's Close!

Linda, that Royal Doulton is gorgeous.
Thanks, Lynda and Don. I think the little pedestal in blue and white is transfer ware, but it does "flow" a little. My sister and I both traded a bit in flow blue when it was popular and my sister kept a number of large pieces. Prices have dropped through the floor. But I'd love to have a truly flow blue salt.

Linda H. I don't think you have 1 salt that I wouldn't love to have. Each one is beautiful and precious. I have none of those, so I am having envy. My favorite is the little oriental man. He is so cool.

Nancy D a ball of flowers.... that will make me happy every day. Very pretty. The heart with a painted Iris, one of my favorite flowers. Very sweet.

163 Nancy Dietel* 02-17-2020 07:31 AM ET (US) IP: 74.105.45.13	Lynda, Nippon is the Japanese word for Japan. It is not a company name. There are many Japanese companies and they would have been on the pieces, followed by the country name. Love all your celery sets. I have very few complete sets.

	This one's a little different.
170 Debi Raitz★ 02-18-2020 05:14 AM ET (US) IP: 69.14.255.241	Lynda: It was in 1921 that wares coming into the US had to be marked Japan instead of Nippon. But if you think that being marked Nippon makes it older than 1921, guess again. Do an internet search for Nippon marks and you'll see how many "old" marks are used on repros. While I think it's safe to assume most of your sets probably are original, it's not entirely a safe bet. Many pieces were made in other countries, like China, using the old Nippon marks and a label that was easily removed. AA Imports also used the marks and had labels.
171 Nancy Dietel★ 02-18-2020 07:29 AM ET (US) IP: 74.105.45.13	However very well known, 'Noritake' as well as 'Nippon' are brands and products produced or sold by the Morimura Company of Japan. The Morimura brothers mark is on a lot if Japanese pieces.

WOW Lynda, You "made out like a bandit", you got some REALLY GREAT SALTS! You do know that at least 2 of your "Garden Salts" are Royal Bayreuth don't you? The 3rd in row 2 is R.B., and the 4th in row 4 is also R.B. I can tell that from the side view, but I'm not sure on the others. Maybe if I study the picture longer, that I'll find another. GOOD for YOU! And "good for all who won salts", that I FORGOT about it!! Lord knows that I DON'T NEED to buy more Salts, at AUCTION Anyhow!

Don, Holy Maccaroni, no I did not know any of those flowers were Royal Bayreuth. I thought 1 looked like it was similar. I bid because of the beauty of the flowers. I just thought they were all so stunning. What's interesting is someone from F B had asked to buy the very last flower in the last row. Never mentioning it could be Royal Bayreuth. I missed a whole group of Royal Bayreuth. It went for over $450.00. I was soooooo sad, now, lolololololol, I'm not. Thank you so much for telling me. And Don I got some glass salts tooooooo.
