Not sure I have much for this topic. I kinda have the 'but', not much of the 'everything' and it sorta ended up in one picture. My plastic salts, pewter salts and carved stone salts.

Three more wood salts. On the left is a contemporary unfinished wood salt my kids found on restaurant tables in the Pacific Northwest and bought one for me. It has a little wooden scoop. In the center is a turned wood salt signed Bouman and milo for the kind of wood. It was made by a woodworker on the Big Island of Hawaii in the early 20th century. I found it in a dusty old antique shop on Oahu, my first wood salt. On the right is a salt made for me as a gift by Dave Peterson, who published two books on his area of expertise, vaseline salt. When he moved to the NW US he moved into wood working. He surprised me with the gift of this salt, made to mimic the art glass salts in silver stands. He even found a stand to send with it.

Yes, Debi, you probably got the candy salt from me. I have another, I think. All I can remember was that a woman came, only once, to a meeting of either OSCAR, NEOSC, or joint meeting many years ago. She said something about making The candy salts from using her real salts as molds. A novelty, indeed.

This is a salt with spoon made by my son from reclaimed wood from downed trees. He's the don who made my cabinets.

French enamel over copper. I believe this pair was at one time part of a centerpiece that probably included a candle holder. The enameling is similar to other salts in museums that date back to the 16th and 17th centuries.

This is silver over brass with enamel interior. I know it's brass because all the silver was missing when I bought it from Suzie. The silver restorer works great on brass.

Thanks Jane. I wish I could find out more about it. Obviously there are no photographs from the 16th and 17th centuries, but I have searched several times and can't find anything helpful on what a medieval table setting would look like. I don't know what museums here in the US would be good at evaluating them. There is a language barrier with European museums.

Linda: Your #122 is Doulton, not Sowerby. It's just a gold paint finish on the pottery. I've seen a few over the years where the gold was wearing off. Your salt looks like new. Your #141-142 I heard were from the Middle East, like Iran, Iraq, or maybe Turkey. Looks like you did well in the auction, lots of new pretties.

Yes, people are hoarding store items, and wearing masks and gloves isn't as silly as it may look. Unfortunately, I've read that the masks available are of no use with this virus. Gloves do make sense because the virus lives on hard surfaces. Do listen to the good sources and avoid contact with others as much as you can. Here in Texas people are being very careful. I live in a senior independent living apartment complex and we are almost completely should down--no outside visitors except for necessary services , even family, and all group activities cancelled within the facility.

I did go to drug store to get Easter candy for Grand kids. My tax accountant works out of his home. And, Dr just called, gotta go back to pharmacy for antibiotics. What did they do in the OLD days.?
197 Nancy C Villaverde★ 03-22-2020 04:52 PM ET (US) IP: 97.99.220.53	People in areas that are fairly clear so far might consider getting set to nest in place as soon as you can because it's coming down the road. My daughter brought me a large load of groceries that I thought was excessive, but now I'm happy I have it. Many basic supplies are no longer on the shelf, and my apartment complex just confined everyone to his or her apartment. Meals and even mail will be delivered to our doors. That's how bad it is in Dallas. If people confine themselves before the virus gets near, maybe some of the explosion can be averted. Read about Italy where they did almost nothing until things got really bad.

A shell salt I got from Mary. We kinda died here. This is all I could find. I've pulled some boxes from storage. Maybe I'll find more.

Yes it does die out quickly here. Everyone wants a new topic and then it fizzles long before month end. I can't come up with any new topics where the few people who post pictures have a lot of that particular type.

This has been a lively topic, and maybe going until the 23rd isn't bad. I fully appreciate the position you are in to try to keep something going here. With so much emphasis on sheltering in place now, internet communication is much appreciated.

Lolololol keep rummaging around looking for "the anything buts"
I found a couple more. Just at the end of our month. Tiny little seashell salt. Really very sweet.

Found these in a drawer all wrapped up. They really aren't the prettiest colors.

206 E. Jane Koble★ 03-24-2020 01:06 PM ET (US) IP: 98.237.105.243		I had a boxed set of those Viking salts but sold them. They're neat!
207 Lynda LaLonde★ 03-24-2020 04:41 PM ET (US) IP: 71.29.26.25		Jane, they are different and kinda neat. Very 50's esp with the colors.
208 Nancy Dietel 03-25-2020 12:51 PM ET (US) IP: 74.105.45.13		#139 is a photo I put up of the box of Viking ships. I don't own them, but do have several and wanted a photo of the available colors.
209 Lynda LaLonde★ 03-25-2020 01:17 PM ET (US) IP: 71.29.26.25		I'm sorry Nancy D. I didn't mean to copy you. Your photo shows the colors to be very bright. I'm going to try to get a horn to match the rest of the boats.
210 Nancy Dietel 03-25-2020 02:43 PM ET (US) IP: 74.105.45.13		Lynda, you didn't copy me, you have a great shot of the pepper horns. They are overlooked a lot. I just thought our friends might have forgotten about the box I showed. I do have a few of the boats with matching horns, but they are hard to find. I will try to photograph them when, and if, I can find them and get to them.

212 Nancy C Villaverde★ 03-26-2020 12:08 PM ET (US) IP: 97.99.220.53		I love my set of silver viking ship with paddle spoon and pepper horn. I think pictures have already been posted. Just found they aren't there. Here's a picture, and I found another couple of silver salts. Edited 03-26-2020 12:41 PM

I'd love to see them, Don.

I just love these. I believe they are pewter. So Much personality.
