LOL...Maybe not, but it is opalescent. You guys know what opalescent is. Sometimes it is a colored salt that when reheated brings out the white rims, dots, etc. Others are just clear with white edges.

Here's an opalescent lacy salt, Basket of Flowers pattern. The milky opalescence often has bluish highlights. Sometimes even fiery spots. Think opal stones.

Sabino art glass opalescent snail. Heavy and awkward for a salt, but it Lalique frosted birds. Questionable whether to call the design opalescent. Sparrow repeated rim on a small, shallow bowl. About 4" wide at the rim, but the center bowl is about right for a salt.

One last example of opalescence. You may have to look closely to see it, but there is opalescence in the vaseline foot of this odd piece, toothpick or vase? It's in Dave Peterson's book on vaseline glass, but without the opalescence. He once told me he wanted this piece if I even decided to sell. I think he lost most of his interest in vaseline glass after that time.

Almost forgot this heavy capsan shape opalescent salt. I generally like art glass style more, but these heavy old Sandwich pieces have their own charm.

	I guess this is cased glass, but opaque. I have a note that says this salt was mentioned in Cyril Manley's book, 'Decorative Victorian Glass' Don't know if that's a big deal or not.

Nancy V: I think you meant #29. I know which one with the brass rim you're talking about, but this glass is a different shape. The bulges on the melon shaped salts with the brass rims are rounded. The opalescent one in #29 has pointed edges even if it doesn't photograph like that. I have other views. Let me see if you can tell the shape better on a different picture.

Nancy V ,Awesome salts. Does anyone ever wonder what it takes to get all these beautiful colors.? That one unusual Steuben is so pretty. I look at Tiffany, Quezell(sp) and Lundbergs and am amazed at their beauty.

Linda H... beautiful salts. That Steuben is wonderful. And the glass in the holders.... make my mouth water.

Another art glass in holder with an irredescent flare. I know I'm a ding dong but this is such a cool month. I LOVE these salts.

Lynda: Those salts were thought to be Loetz for a long time but they were made by Kralik. English sterling rims does not guarantee that the glass is also English. Many Czech items had English sterling adornments.

Another favorite, a gift from a woman I met in the charming little hamlet of Barnby in the Willows in England. My sister and I met her in the local pub at dinner, and she invited us to dinner at her home the following evening. I admired this salt and she gave it to me. I said oh no, couldn't take it and she insisted "Have it. I paid only a few pounds just because it is pretty and really have no use for it." So I took it. lol

Opalescence doesn't show much in the photo, but it's there.

Lynda, it does resemble Daum but it's not signed at all. Certainly was not priced as a Daum and it's probably the closest I will get to a real one. The red, white and blue spatter salt came from the same dealer as the alabaster (maybe) Steuben so I got a good deal on the two together. She was a well known high end show dealer who dealt in a lot of Tiffany,

	Steuben, etc. and she said it was a Steuben but I don't know because it isn't marked.

I realize... affordable ...but it just wears off as that's a heavy spot for holding the salt. Much rather sterling.

I remember when spatter glass was everywhere, quite a rage for it. I had several but sold them all.

I've seen a lot of spatter glass where the color was like these but the other day..... maybe on ebay, maybe on a glass site, I saw some pretty pastel ones.

213 Debi Raitz★ 05-31-2020 05:50 PM ET (US) IP: 67.149.133.228	Those are pretty Lynda. It might take me a day or two to get the new page up for the square salts, but I'll get it done. Taking a short break after powering through to get that whole page posted. It gets tiring, and sometimes frustrating getting it all uploaded the way I want it.
