Lynda, in #96, the one with eye cups, do you have an individual picture of the 5th one from the left in the front row? I have one like it I think but maybe with a different medallion on the sides. I don't know much about it though there is one in H&J with a different medallion than mine. Have to look up the number.

110 Nancy C Villaverde★ 07-09-2020 11:32 AM ET (US) IP: 97.99.220.53	In the 106 picture, I see that the bowl is very shallow, as would fit with the idea that only a small taste of ice cream was given in a penny lick. Mine does have a much deeper bowl. Your 107 does look more like a tiny vase, Nancy D, assuming the bowl is open all the way to the stem. I'm not at all sure what my lavender one is, but I love the color.

Nebraska Nancy, I could have "SWORN" that your #39, would be marked Gouda Holland! I just unpacked a box yesterday(from 25 years ago!) that had a Gouda Pottery open salt in it, and thought "WHY wouldn't I have this out, where it can be seen?" I've come up with several things that will fit in this Months catagory, now I just have to get them photographed!
112 Nebraska Linda 07-10-2020 10:13 AM ET (US) IP: 24.241.92.154	Don,I believe that #39 is a Gouda piece, somewhere I have a piece of paper that explains the markings. After I get done with my current project of cleaning out genealogy files I'll see if I can find that. I know where it should be.

Nancy D, I've always wondered if there really are covered salts. Open salt by definition has no cover. Of course, there could be a few, like the covered lacy version. I've wondered if the covered ones were intended to be something else.

I think I may have sold you #138. I had one much like it at any rate.

Maybe #144 is a trinket dish. Hofbauer Byrdes included small covered trinket dishes in several shapes. #145 a mustard pot. Mustard pots have a lid with a little slot for the spoon to fit through. Sometimes they are in a set with an open salt and a pepper shaker. Many are listed on eBay as covered salts.

We seem a bit stalled, and I'm sure many of us have a lot more non-salts lurking in our cabinets.
I took a few photos of items inside my shelves so pictures aren't great, but I confess I'm nowhere near listing all the little pieces I've accumulated that aren't really salts.

Here is a Wrigley's chewing gum stand I bought in my vaseline glass period with 5 Fenton nut cups. The two green ones in the back are reflected in the mirror wall of the case.

I have many pieces that are dear to me because of their back story. I sold some pieces to a collector who specialized in one glass pattern, but the salt in the pattern was rare. I liked it and hadn't listed it for sale, but after I'd sold him some larger pieces, I agreed to sell him the salt. In gratitude, he gifted me with a Westmoreland pattern salt and matching small rose bowl. I keep them together.

Here are four pieces that are setting with my salts. The two on the left I include as celery salts. There are many pretty ones of this type and they are usually inexpensive, never having been as popular with collectors as other forms. On the right rear is a lidless box with delicate foliage around the base, and in the front a miniature serving dish.
