For some reason I want to sing "Blue Bayou." I guess a color topic will put us in a repeat mode. But blue is still beautiful. Do we need this one for the H/J project?

This is more royal blue than cobalt

Nancy D, if you hear someone upstairs rummaging around in your salts, don't call the law. It's only me looking for that blue #9. Everytime I see that salt my heart stops for a second.
 There's a blue in there. Not Bimini but very thin and light.

Those the color of #39 make me drool.

Jan, is the swan on #37 inside on the bottom of the bowl or on the base? Looks like the view is down inside but I'm spacial challenged.

Nebraska Linda, I have a long string of Davidson's but the only blue is a plain one. I don't have any of the patterned ones with the opaque rim. Sob, sob.

Nebraska Linda, I spotted what looked like a flaw on the first photo of the Davidson blue still on ebay, and the seller admitted it was damaged, scrape or flake, and he hadn't noticed. He looks like a good seller, so maybe he hadn't. I've failed to notice damage but saw it when I was taking photos to list. I don't like that he holds items in his hand in photos.

Lynda, yes, I have the identical boat shape in red.

At this point I'm not buying damaged salts unless they are very rare or I'm just dying to have them. I guess the exceptions mean I sometimes will buy damaged ones. Especially buying on line though you can't tell how bad the damage really is.
 The English seller is honest about the damage, shows three chipped feet, one worse than the other two.

the box inside is 5/8 inch deep, and 5/8 inch across the top lip, and tapers to smaller at the bottom. my great grandmother's tiny thimble will just fit in it, or plain a ring without any added stones or bits. In total it's a little less than 1 1/2 inches tall and 1 1/8 inch across
There's no place to put a label so I don't think it was for an ointment or anything. the bottom and top both are diamond point
