I have only 1 Jasperware unpacked. I know I have a couple of pieces somewhere. But, I am looking forward to see everybodys pieces.
Judy, that black piece took my breath away. The blue silver rims are gorgeous. Can't wait to see more.

I have a black basalt like Judy's #4, and a couple other black Wedgwood pieces. This is the salt and matching shaker but I know there's a full condiment set with mustard in a holder. It had a wicked price on it when I saw it long ago.

Not sure if this is supposed to be a salt. Maybe a toothpick or match holder.

My last black piece. Probably not meant to be a salt either. I think salts have a glazed inside finish and this piece along with my #7 do not have a shiny inside.

These are marked Wedgwood - Made in England - and dated 1953. They are two of the same salt, just showing both sides. They are also not shiny inside so maybe not meant as a salt.

Debi, never thought I would like a black salt. But, I am loving all these. I found some of my (Wedgwood) supposedly salts are holders for a lighter. The Jasperware is my favorite finish..... or nonfinish. Can't wait to see more.

Debi, I found that trencher by Wedgwood in Edinburgh in the 90's, and I've never seen another of that type by Wedgwood. I think it is quite old. It's in almost perfect condition, one slight chip I think.

Here is another example of Wedgwood that isn't Jasperware but Creamware. Neither of the pieces I have is a salt, but a thimble holder and a miniature jug.

This brown jasperware was identified as Dudson by Kent.

Debi, you have some very nice Wedgwood.....or other? If it is Duncan by Kent is it still Wedgwood?

Kent Hudson did a lot of research on English china and pottery. He identified it as made by Dudson.

Debi, Dudson, sorry. Not the greatest name in the world. Course it is better than Puckeberg, pukeberg, or what ever.

I'm pleased to see Wedgwood creamware salts since all I could post were other forms. Your pieces are so beautiful, Debi.

I though someone else would post this one. It's probably the most common Wedgwood.

I love all that has been shown so far. I think I have some others. Taking pictures might be easy, finding them not so much. But will try. I still have a couple days to participate.
